Conversations Between Hugo Stinnes and Gen. Degoutte Expected to Bear Fruit

French Answer to Lord Curzon Is That Republic Intends to Sit Tight

> By SISLEY HUDDLESTON By Special Cable

PARIS, Oct. 8-Although the French made it clear in the conversations between Hugo Stinnes, the German industrial leader and General Degoutte in Düsseldorf that they did not mean to intervene in the relations of the workers with their masters and en-force either an eight or 10-hour day, it is believed that from the result of this talk Germany will be able to resume payments in kind within a week or two. This is a much more important step in French eyes than the mere theoretic withdrawal of orders relating to passive resistance. For the first time practical measures are about to be taken by which work is to be resumed, coal and other rep-arations material delivered, and thus negotiations between the governments made possible.

Herr Stinnes and General Degoutte are not authorized to conclude any arrangements, but it is obvious that a preliminary understanding between them will make for a general settle-ment. Herr Stinnes is credited with big plan which will assure France and Belgium the value of 250,000,000, 000 gold marks annually. Where trouble is likely to arise is on the question of who will pay the cost. If the German workers are obliged to continue to work more than an eight-

be the workers who are paying. Socialism Increases in the Ruhr

With the development of Socialist views in the Ruhr valley, the workers may strenuously protest, especially as they are not only under the normal capitalist pressure but are under the menace of bayonets and working for a foreign power. Nevertheless, if the Stinnes proposals go through, there is a brighter prospect than before of is a brighter prospect than before of deliveries being made, and in these conditions negotiations may become possible. M. Poincaré made another speech yesterday, in which he declared that those who hoped for an early change in French opinion made a great mistake, and he urged that the Allies would, instead of quarreling, try to understand the French views. The French hold pledges which they will not release. M. Poincaré said he was glad that friendly and confident conversations like those he had with Stanley Baldwin would be held from Stanley Baldwin would be held from time to time to tighten the ties of the Entente. M. Poincaré said little that was new or constructive, and it is plain that he is waiting for the next move from Germany.

Marquess Curzon's Request

Definite information available to The Christian Science Monitor regarding M. Poincaré's view of Marquess Curzon's request for proposals from France is to the effect that France has no proposals and merely means to wait until passive resistance has in fact ceased and co-operation begun before discussing the offer which the German Government should make through the Reparations Commission. It would be idle to expect any other attitude. The French officials are be-

Certain Financial and Economic Questions to Be Dealt With Summarily

BERLIN, Oct. 8-In his speech before the Reichstag on Saturday, the Chancellor, Dr. Gustav Stresemann definitely restarted his coalition ship amongst the rocks and shoals of party animosities and vested interests on which it so recently went aground. He made little attempt to show that the comparatively minor changes in-troduced into its crew indicate any very large modification in the course it is to steer. Regarding the Government's policy also, the alterations made are all in the direction of placating its opponents, rather than of increasing efficiency.

Program Is Adventurous The program as it still stands nevertheless is sufficiently adventurous. It proposes to give dictatorial powers to financial and economic questions, other than those especially reserved. It thus covers the whole problem of reorganizing currency and revising taxation. Important decentralization is also to be attempted to end the impossible existing arrangement by which states and local hodies are able to spend the federal revenues which they are not responsible for raising. Dr. Stresemann's announcement had a mixed reception in the Reichstag, but he succeeded in carrying the bulk of what was at the beginning of his speech by no means a very friendly audience. Whether he will be equally fortunate in the country has yet to be The indications so far are not

It discussed seriously the question of directing its representatives in the Reichstag to abstain from voting when the Ermächtigungs Gesetz (the Ex-traordinary Powers bill) comes up, though this measure cannot pass unless it receives a two-thirds majority or over. There's a reason.

There's a reason.

And in this reason there's a worldwide lesson for the drys. The paid workers of the liquor forces working out from propaganda factories in New York. Chicago, St. Louis, Boston, and other large cities, are careful to avoid Ohio in their arguments for the return of beer and wine and "personal liberty." dry leaders declare.

The reason is this:

Last year the Ohio wets were snowed under by a majority of 183,000 to the liquor forces. Snowed under so completely they have decided not to attempt to dig themselves out until another year at least. There will be no wet fight in Ohio this year—an unusual experience for this State—beusual experience for this State—be-cause fighting prohibition has been a business in this section for many

In fact, the struggle on both sides has been severe in the history of liquor restriction.

Women Turn Tables More about that 189,000 defeat in

The brewers admit that the women and the churches turned the tables. Up to two weeks before last Novem ber's election the wets of this State said that nothing remained but the counting of ballots. They believed in newspaper straw ballots and these showed that the wets had won again. But they had not figured on the women and the churches—and women and churches do not participate in

The record of the past decade shows how determined the Ohio drys were to make prohibition good where it started. In 1914 they asked a statewide vote on prohibition and were beaten by 84,152. They came back the next year and lost by 55,408. Two years later they lost by 1137 in what the wets regarded as a terribly close shave. Immediately they rallied to his the attack again and won in 1918 by 25.759. The wets then began initiating repeal legislation. In 1919 the wets lost by 41,583 with their 2.75 beer measure and last year it failed again by 189,000.

STATE BOARD ASKS OF GASOLINE PRICE

Mr. Hultman Says Massachusetts Consumers Discriminated Against

The noted Polish soldier was accompanied by Col. James Justice of Puts Evidence in Hands of Attorney-General and Federal Trade Commission

> Declaring that Massachusetts consumers of gasoline are being discriminated against in the price of this commodity and that "a most extraordinary condition" exists in this industry. Eugene C. Hultman, chairman of the Commission on the Necessaries of Life, today made public a report, which records the giving of secret discounts, comments on economic conditions existing in the business, and compares the Massachusetts price with prices prevailing elsewhere.

As a result of its preliminary investigation, the commission reports, it was found that "gasoline in tank car lots could be purchased in practically unlimited quantities for immediate delivery at about 10 cents per gallon less than the price charged to consumers at filling stations in Massachusetts. The commission, therefore, set out to determine the reason

Not a "Necessary"

It was felt that the best means of approach was the collection and com pilation of the volume of gasoline ales, prices and profits in the State Questionnaires were sent to refiners jobbers and retailers of gasoline ask ing data concerning sources of supply volume of distribution, costs and net profit. From some this information was forthcoming and others refused to supply it for various reasons, chiefly Louisiana "Gun Club" Plan Will on the ground that they did not care to disclose their business secrets to the commission.

The commission discovered that it would be necessary to use the power of summons and appealed to the Attorney-General for a ruling. He held that gasoline is not a "necessary of life" unless its price affects the price of necessaries. The commission found no justification for so holding, stating in its report that "if the price of gasoline was reduced 50 per cent, it would not affect the price charged for necessaries. not affect the price charged for neces-saries of life."

The attention of the commission, however, has been called to the practice of several of the large companies giving certain of their customers special discounts. Therefore, it would appear that discriminatory price cutting to retailers is also being practiced.

Automobile associations and clubs in Massachusetts could render a practical service to their members by purchasing bulk gasoline in the spot market for resale at a reasonable price.

Retail coal dealers and others with side-track facilities could very profitably engage in the gasoline business, as they could buy gasoline at the tank car price instead of being obliged to pay the much higher tank wagon price.

In conclusion, the report of the commission says:

Most of the gasoline sold in Massachusetts is from producers doing business in the States listed above. Gasoline is sold at a lower price to consumers in such states than to consumers in Massachusetts, The difference in the prices charged in these states is much more than the difference in freight rates. As things are Mr. Baldwin's precinitation had two results—one, that Eng-land, with great obligations was obliged to press France, or to demand a large share of German payments and therefore unable to treat the con tinent generously, and two, the American policy having crystallized about the debts owing to this arrangement, either France nor any other accorded England. These are unforunate results that have complicated the whole problem, and about which much will be heard when the conference is possible.

UNITED STATES TRADE AGENCY SOON TO BE OPENED AT JAVA

Steady Flow of Business Between Dutch East Indies and Boston Is Reported

With a substantial flow of business from the Dutch East Indies to the United States, much of which comes to Boston, and a comparative minimum return business, the potential importance of that section, which has no direct American trading houses, has induced the United States Government to establish a new office of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, at Batayia, Java. J. F. van Wickel, recently appointed trade commissioner to the Dutch East Indies and that involved the trade of control of the states for the development of the islands to deal directly with the trade, yet it is probable that the more effective program at this time requires the employment of Dutch importing houses as intermediaries because the development of the islands. The other Government representatives here today are Julian lespie, trade commissioner at Constantinople, who is making his first return trip to the United States in more than three years, and Will Lowrie, American Consul-General at Athens.

Regarding the Dutch East Indies, Mr. Yan Wickel, who is familiar by long experience with the Orient and long experience with the Orient and Far East, says:

The Intch East Indies may be properly cointed among those expert markets which have been neglected by the American exporter. In 1921, the United States enjoyed a fairly well-balanced trade with the Dutch East Indies. Our imports from that section totaled $32,-142,000, while we exported commodities to the value of $43,34,500. The was a point of the experience of the succeeding tear this balance was seriously broker and has not since been reestablished. In 1922 the United States imported from the Dutch East Indies goods to the value of $34,424,000, while our exports to that area amounted to only $8,036,000.

Big Increase in Imports

Big Increase in Imports

During the first seven months of 1923 our imports from the Dutch East Indies exceeded the total for the entire year of 1924 outlet our exports during the same and the control of the entire year of 1924 outlet out only flightly in advance of the control of the c year ago. During the months ended July, 1923, the United States purchased commodities valued at 334,651,867. During the same period, our exporters disposed of American products, valued at 36,324,139.

The principal imports into the Dutch East Indies are outton piece goods, iron and steel, machinery and foodstuffs. These four main groups Constitute about half the total import trade of the islands. The United States figures at present only in the iron and steel and machinery imports, its principal competitors in these commodities being the Netherlands, Great Britain and Germany. While thus far the American exporter has permitted the piece goods riarket of the islands to go to the Netherlands, Japan and the United Kingdom, largely by default, it is believed in informed quarters that this country can claim an appreciable proportion of the piece goods trade if it organizes its facilities to handle it. The more important iniscallaneous imported articles, coming from Europe, include such commodities as supplies petroleum products, automobiles and matches. The United States supplies petroleum products, automobiles and tires, chemicals and paper and paper products. The factors involved in trade hetween the United States and the Dutch East Indies furnish in some particulars a most favorable background for the development of American exports.

The Dutch East Indies are interested in getting American capital to develop the resources there. It is possible for some enterprising American firm to erect a textile mill and a four mill, etc., in that country, thus making a market for American machinery.

Practically all of our imports from the Dutch East Indies, are such noncompetitive products as rubber, cohratanica, flour and tin. Under the present trade movement, the gold credits established by the Dutch East Indies through the sale of these commodities are used to finance imports from Europe and to meet interest payments on loans negotiated by Netherlands inferents in the United States.

While this meets with the approyal of those who believe that European credits must be strengthened if the American was obligations are to be injuidated, there is a growing sentiment in American business circles that direct contact, both financially and through trade channels, with the Islands would be far more advantageous than sich indirect benefits as may be derived under the present trade and insancial Non-Competitive Products

The ex change fluctuations and the high protective tariff imposed by Turkey re-stricts foreign trade considerable and has practically shut off a profitable business in oleo and oil done by a Boston concern.

Both Mr. Gillespie and Mr. Lowrie spoke optimistically of the future in their respective territories. The reopening of the vast markets, of which Turkey is the distributing center, following cessation of military activities, for the first time in nearly four years took place within the lest tree. years, took place within the last two months. This is taken to indicate a much larger business, with the only obstacle now in the way of improve-ment being the unsettled conditions, and fluctuations of foreign exchange. Textile imports, particularly, are ex-pected to increase heartly, especially pected to increase heavily, especially cotton sheetings. Turker is the second largest market in the world for cotton goods and yarns, as it is the distributing center for many Asia Minor countries and southern Russia. Mr. Gillespie pointed out that Japan has become a serious competitor in this line, taking nearly 50 per cent of the American trade in the past seven months. Mr. Gillespie also looks for a heavy increase in the production of Turkish wool and mohair, for the world's mar-kets, most of which comes to Boston, with the reopening of the trade and caravan routes to the remote interior. Much of this product is expected to find its way to the seaboard and distributing points, which in recent years has not been able to be moved out of the isolated sections.

The educational started yesterday. The educational campaign to instruct the public in fire prevention methods which Theo-dore A. Glynn, fire commissioner of the City of Boston, is making is re-celving the support of civic organizations, women's clubs and business'men throughout the city.

Public service corporations, aided by officials in the wire division of the Fire Department, investigated conditions in their plants this morning in an effort to correct any conditions which might cause a fire, according to John O. Taber, chief of the Fire Department. School children wrot essays on fire prevention, and the necessity of being careful was pointed out to them by their teachers.

Fire Prevention Week, radio talks on ways of lowering fire figures, by of-ficers of the fire department, will be broadcasted from local stations. Leaflets listing "do's" and "don'ts" for fire prevention are being distrib-uted in every part of the city.

Motion picture theaters in Boston have been supplied with slides and films which aim to arouse interest in reducing risks, and inducing constructive thought on preventing fires.

Fire houses, throughout the city, will be open daily until 9 p. m. and firemen will be on duty to answer any inquiry on the location of fire alarm boxes, and how to proceed in case a fire is discovered, but they will also emphasize the necessity of clean, orderly cellars, attics and hallways as important in preventing a fire from getting started.

only now struggling over ground that Ohio had battled over years ago. Perhaps the strength of the liquor interests and of the temperance forces was more evenly matched in this State than in any other. Perhaps city and rural population were here most equally divided, a characteristic that had part in the decision of the Assoc ation Against the Prohibition Amend-ment last year to select Ohio for its anti-prohibition example, as the writer was told at its wet headquarters then the Nation against the liquor traffic came naturally the greatest endeavor to stifle it.

The doctrine of personal liberty of which much is murmured today in plea for beer was early seized upon by the Ohio liquor interests as shining sword. They embodied sonal liberty" in a stately building and give its name to the state-wide political organization they formed. The dis interested citizen of today who objects to national prohibition because it violates his personal liberty may possibly be encouraged in his conviction by learning that the brewers and dis-tillers of Ohio years ago felt the same way so strongly that they created the 'Personal Liberty League" to act as their political agent in fighting prohibition The fortress of "personal liberty" in Ohio was a handsome old-fashioned stone structure at 22 East Garfield Place, one of the finest houses on this little parkway in downtown Twelve years ago when the Personal Liberty League was in its prime the Anti-Saloon League's Cincinnati branch consisted of a stenographer and its local superintendent, a often hard driven by the odds he had to face in this community.

Change is Marvelous

The change here in the brewery batle front since that time is marvelous Going back well into the past century, the Moerleins used to dictate Hamilton County politics. They were not merely the brewery in the politics but, as old-time wets recall, the politicians themselves. The Moerlein plant has been closed and part of it is being used by a manufacturing tailor. The ancient hilltop resorts where of a Sunday Cincinnatians of German descent flocked with their families to sit and drink beer as in the old country had passed before the memory of the younger generation of today. The stronghold of the Personal Liberty League today is little more than a name on the door in a modern office building, its spokesmen indicate. Local units over the State survive, state headquarters are simply given houseroom by the Ohio Brewers'

Association. Supplanting the Personal Liberty League came the Ohio Home Rule Association, which these interests brought out for their last great vic tory. In 1914 with the Home Rule As sociation serving as their political agent, the brewers got county local option repealed. The Home Rule Asclation, they say, is a going concern

NEW LONDON, Conn., Oct. 8 (Special)-Prohibition enforcement work here is not to be curtailed because of a mere matter of municipal boundary lines. At a conference between state and municipal authorities it was agreed that two New London policemen, who have been engaged in effective enforcement work, will continue their efforts unhampered by a controversy over who will pay their expense accounts.

The Rev. Timothy M. Crowley, D. D., a Roman Catholic pastor, raised the question publicly as to whether the city of New London should continue to pay the expense of Sergt. Samuel Hick and Patrolman Frank Philopena, New London policemen, in nightly raids and pursuit of bootleggers, which took them over the city line into the town of Waterford. authority of the men outside of the city was even questioned. Hadlai A. Hall, State's Attorney and the prosecuting officer for New London County, which includes both the city and town mentioned, promptly replied that the men were working at his direction and on his advice 'that policemen "should not allow them-selves to be tripped up by boundary lines," because this is just what would serve the bootlegger and the rum-runner best. Major Hull pointed out that the motor car employed in the pursuit of the liquor runners is owned privately by Sergeant Hick and that not only does he furnish his services and the car at hours of night when he is not on regular duty but that the patrolman is devoting time in addition to that given in his tour of duty in the

The town of Waterford, the State's Attorney made plain, is a refuge for bootleggers and had it been restricted to local authorities it would have been impossible for the men at his direction to arrest and obtain the conviction of one bootlegger recently sentenced to one year in jail and fined $1000.

Major Hull, Capt. Charles A. Pinney and the newly elected city man-ager, William A. Holt, in a recent conference held that the New Lon-Hoemen were engaged in perfectly legitimate practice and that all expense incurred by them would be met by the city of New London, the recognized goal of the rumrunners.

he effect of public discussion of matter has been to strengthen the hands of the police and prose-cutor and remove insidious criticism, which was advantageous to the boot-leggers and their clientele.

DRY ENFORCEMENT DEMAND IN MALDEN

Mass Meeting Pledges Support to Make Law More

Obedience to law, with special reference to the prohibition law as the most flagrantly violated at present, is the object of a Malden campaign inaugurated last evening in The Auditorium at a mass meeting called by the Ministerial Association of Malden. Those present pleaged enthusiastic support

Those present pledged enthusiastic support...

The Rev. H. M. Crane, of the Centre Methodist Church, president of the association, presided. Speakers included the Rev. Dr. Edwin H. Hughes, bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church; John V. Kimball, Mayor of Malden and R. P. Hutton, state superintendant of the Massachusetts Anti-Saloof League.

The speakers united in holding the citizens themselves largely responsible for lawbreaking in their community. Indifference or jocularity, smug complications, and failure to support of ficials entrusted with enforcement or its known that the United States the law had much to do with the law-breaking, they maintained.

Bishop Hughes, while praising the judiciary of Massachusetts, said a too technical interpretation of the statutes hampered enforcement. He warned against putting in office men who do not themselves respect the law.
"Those men and women, whether in clubs or private homes, who are evading the country's laws, have no right One certain way of enforcing respect for the law said Dr. Crane. lay in arousing public opinion. When so-called respectable citizens adopted the attitude of spreading jokes about prohibition they could hardly blame officials for lax administration.

Mr. Hutton asserted that Massachusetts and other seaboard states had become the cesspool into which the rest of the Nation was discharging its worst elements. One reason, he said, was the failure of Massachusetts to enact an enforcement code, which meant that the 5000 state officials might only arrest and punish under the state laws for illicit sales, leaving but 26 federal prohibition agents to prosecute makers, transporters and of the organization of the police and prosecutors and the inadequacy of the sentences imposed in most of the courts. In the Boston Federal Court, out of more than 1000 cases, one in 17 received a prison sentence and five out of six paid fines averaging only $48. "Officers would rather be efficient than inefficient, but the people must support them in efficiency," he said. "The effort must be continuous."

Mayor Kimball said the situation in Malden was not hopeless. He called for the co-operation of citizens in en-

Rhode Island Dry Leaders En- Experiment Station Director Points at Crop Limitations couraged by Announcement of and Mill Competition

AMHERST, Mass., Oct. 8 (Special)
—So long as the mills and factories are able to pay higher wages for shorter hours of labor it is useless to think of importing and holding farm help, said Sidney B. Haskell, director of the Massachusetts Experiment Station, to a representative of The Christian Science Monitor, in answering the question as to what would happen to New England agriculture if 10,000 live western farmers moved to New England and started to farm. The ques-Norman S. Case, District Attorney, Massachusetts Commissioner of Agri-

"Well, I wonder what they would raise," said Director Haskell. "The dairy industry has been suffering from an ever-upply of milk and returning from Washington after a conference with the United States Attorney-General, on Saturday, an-nounced that he is preparing to take this step against liquor men in this State. This announcement, coupled with the news that, the Grand Jury for Providence County is engaged in investigating the liquor traffic as countenanced by police in cities and for any great expansion in that direction. New England farmers might be able to grow as many bushels of grain on an acre of land as the western men, but they could not grow as much per man or per dollar lifwested and, they gave up the attempt long ago.

In fact, your 10,000 western farmers probably would do just what so much of the agricultural population of New England has done. They would not stay on the farms; they would soon be absorbed by the mills and factories.

Our agricultural troubles really go back to two fundamental things. The pelation of the supply of agricultural products to the demand for them has thrown agriculture out of joint all over the country. The second source of difficulties is not at all peculiar to New England, but it is more in evidence here than elsewhere. That is the competition for labor between farm and factory, between agriculture and industry.

Industrial labor, largely through its own efforts, has been raised to a plane far above the level of farm labor in shorter hours, in higher wages, and in that time under the injunction clause, which provides for the closing of liquor places for one year, were improperly drawn and declined to grant Mr. Sheldon was asked by District Attorney Case to submit new affidavits of sales and possession on which he Registered at The Christian

Cubes and Pyramids By HUGH FERRISS

F ONE is curious as to the nature of the zoning laws which are now being adapted in so many American being adapted in so many American cities, and in the effect of these laws on architecture, he would do well to step for a moment on to the roof of the Architects Bullding at Fortieth Street and Park Avenue in New York City. He would find directly beneath him a pair of buildings which illustrate, more effectively than any smount of written description, the precise nature of the laws as they are precise nature of the laws as they are being applied in this metropolis. . These buildings, erected in the same locality—they face one another across Madison Avenue—both occupy similar areas and rise to similar altitudes. One of them—the mass suggested at the right in the accompanying illus-fration—was built before the passage of the law; the building at the left, thereafter—it is, in fact, reaching completion at this moment.

The old building is a box, pure and simple. On a square of land a cubelike building is the cheapest structure which may be erected, and the one offering the maximum floor area—that is to say, rentals to the owner. As a result, American cities, in the com-mercial districts, have been vast asmblages of boxes.

The new building, were it not for the zoning law, would have undoubtedly been a box also. But the law required that when this building had reached a moderate height, it thereafter recede from all sides as it rose. The law placed, as it were, an envel-ope of pyramidical or conical shape above the base of the structure and stated: It must remain herein.

Pyramidical Mass * Probably the most arresting result of this act, from the architectural point of view, is this basic pyramidical form itself. As the pyramids of Egypt —in addition to being, perhaps, the last word in actual structural solidity—so profoundly suggest polse and are so esthetically satisfying that they have become the symbols of strength and durability, so do these modern pyramids presage dities no longer composed of miscellaneous rectangles but of coherent forms strongly founded and organically diminishing as they ascend.

Of vital importance to the designer, as well, is the fact that pyramids, no matter how immediately their bases may abut one another, still completely expose their sloping planes. Being exposed, they must be designed. How different the old box which, in built up sections, exposed but one side!

That situation resulted in a certain decadence of architecture: design became simply the decoration of one surface: an applied facade. We have become so familiar with these facades with their three divisions: the
"base" (two or three stories in stone). the "shaft" (an indefinite number of stories in brick), and the "crowning" ember (two or three stories of terra cotta columns), that we were nearly forgetting that this "architecture" had nothing whatever to do with the actual uilding which it but masked.

But pyramids demand three-dimennot two-dimensional, design. The persona is removed and the face tself may now be perceived and deneated. These new forms require and less of the some painter; which means, perhaps, that architecture will come more definitely into its own.

Beyond saying that the changes in style caused by these requirements are immediate and profound, it is impossible to predict precisely what new styles will evolve. The large structures which have recently been erected in New York under the law are highly received and way. experimental in character and offer widely different solutions to the prob-lem. Certain tendencies are clear. It the façade into three members can no longer be applied; the great "steps." no longer be applied; the great steps, which buildings must now take to keep within the limiting slopes set by daw, produce stratas of real significance which render the old divisions meaningless. The heavy overhanging meaningless. The heavy overhanging cornice is finally doomed. It never did mean anything, and on a structure whose entire movement is withdrawing and ascending, it is impossible.

the building, the pinnacle becomes of prime importance in the design. We could put any practical bric-a-brac we liked—penthouses, tanks, etc.—on the dat roofs of hoxes, more or less hidden by the fade cornice, and no one seriously rentoratrated, unlikable as these may have then. But the apexes of pyramids with the pondered by many; the designer will expend thought and he designer will expend thought and aste in fashioning them. The two buildings to which the sketch refers also clearly demonstrate he practical aspects of the law—the considerations, in fact, which caused it to be formulated.

It is obvious that the building at the It is obvious that the building at the left permits more direct sunlight to reach the street than does the one at the right. And the latter throws the former into shadow more quickly than vice versa. A greater volume of air surrounds the left-hand building and one may imagine his office within it to be more pleasant, more efficient, more healthy:

healthy.

While it is true that towers may still be erected to any height, provided they do not occupy more than one-fourth of the ground area, it is apparent that buildings will no longer bulk as large as they did. Just as fewer people can get into a pyramid than into a cube of the same base, so

Competitions for Commercial Aircraft WITH a great number of new com-mercial airplanes being pro-duced in various parts of the world, and with a marked difference opinion among designers as to at commercial airplanes should look like, it is very desirable that there should be some official trial of merit to give the intending purchaser a concrete basis for his choice among the rival types. Practical experience does not serve as a sufficient guide here, as it would with most commercial articles, for experience in the commercial operation of aircraft is as yet so restricted that it is difficult to generalize on its lessons. The ordi nary problems which arise in run-ning an air transport service are sufficiently troublesome without ad-ding to them the hazard of being saddled with unfit machines because there is no satisfactory record of achievement and performance to show

Various methods of measuring com-mercial usefulness have been tried, the most ambitious having been made in the British civil aircraft trials of 1920, when points were given to the competing machines for a dozen different features of performance and design. Far simpler were the rules for the French competition for transport airplanes, which was held two weeks ago and for which the govern-ment offered $62,000 in prizes. All of the entrants were required to cover a 1900-mile course, of which one section 370 miles in length had to be flown without a stop. The prizes were awarded to the competitors whose speed, multiplied by the weight of passengers and express carried for every unit of fuel consumed during the whole flight, was the greatest. factors of importance in commercial airplane design, were thus taken directly into account. Of more interest than the formula on which the prizes were awarded. however, were the preliminary tests to which all the machines in the Prench competition had to be subcompetition had to be sub-All had to show their ability to leave the ground within 280 yards from a standing start, and to come to rest within a like distance after touching the ground in a normal landing. An airplane is of little use for commerce if it is unable to operate from

Furthermore, each competing airwhere all the engines are brought together in a central compartment and the propeller is driven through gearing. The provision for normal flight and for making turns in both directions with one engine stopped at once climinated from consideration the twin-engined machines hitherto ex-tensively used for commercial pur-poses, and indeed it appears that that poses, and indeed it appears that that particular arrangement of power plants in an airplane has passed the which the large airship is coming to zenith of its populartly, Of the six machines which actually appeared as competitors at Le Bourget last month, one had three engines and all the rest had four. Undoubtedly the commercial airplaine of the future, which must was falling into the doldrums. Now, cial airplaine of the future, which must be virtually freed from the possibility of a forced landing, will have at least able. The Government of the United States has taken no direct interest in the subject, so it has never been pos-sible to offer prizes large enough to induce the production of new ma-chines especially designed to make the best possible showing under a specific set of rules. Existing machines, how-ever, have occasionally been brought together in contests, and a very interesting race was included in the sched-ule of the St. Louis meet last week, as a preliminary to the Pulitzer Trophy event. The awards there were made on an efficiency formula similar to that used in the French contest, and the victory went to a monoplane which carries four passengers, with only 100 horsepower. Such a race should certainly be held annually, unless some department of the Govern-ment should act directly and offer generous prizes for a more elaborate. petition, on the general lines followed by the British three years ago, but with the modifications suggested by the experience gained at that time and by experience in practical commercial the difference between the fit and the > European Interest in Light Airplanes Although the wild enthusiasm for gliders which marked the summer of 1922 seems to have cooled very genuine and practical interest in light airplanes, built on glider lines and driven by engines of 10 horsepower or less, has taken its place. A dozen such machines have competed in recent meets in France and Belgium, and the English meet which weeks has drawn entries from nearly all of the prominent airplane con-structors of the British Isles. Firms which have made their reputation entirely on bombers and large commercial types, which have never built a machine of less than two tons weight, are suddenly branching out into motorcycle-engined airplanes totaling about 600 pounds when ready for flight and with the pilot on board. If they had no technical merits what-ever, these light airplane races and economy contests would still give a distinct thrill to the old-timers in flight, for they turn back the page to the old days before airplane design had become an engineering science and when the interest in the trials of a new machine centered in seeing whether or not it would be able to get on the ground at all. The light airplane, necessarily underpowered: involves some return to the practices flying fields of moderate size, such as are liable to be provided near to the center of a large city. In fact, the arise at dawn and make their way to center of a large city. In fact, the arise at dawn and make their way to rench regulations might well have, a far-distant field. Neglecting any military applications, this world-wide review of interest is very encouraging from the commercial point of view, for it has long been the firm opinion of those who have studied all transport without prejudice for against any particular method that the airplane and the airship are natural supplements to each other, and that neither can reach its full usefulthat neither can reach its full useful ness alone. To regard those two major types as rivals, seeking to exclude each other from the field, can only be disastrous to the efficient utilization of both.

BOMBAY, Sept. 4 (Special Correspondence)—An institution, known as the House of Laborers, has been started at Commilla, in Bengal, every member of which is required to do some kind of productive manual work. The laborers themselves are capitalists, and they are also graduates and undergraduates in technical engineering. Started only a year ago, with four or five youngmen, this institution is now turning out engineering work that is eliciting high praise. There are now 50 men on the rolls, a fully equipped engineering workshop, a miniature technical library and a small laboratory, Agriculture and commerce also receive due attention.

Wireless for Ships' Lifeboats

A third apparatus is a wireless ransmitter for ships tifeboats. The whole thing can be placed complete between the two after thwarts of a 26-foot open lifeboat. It contains a one-quarter kilowatt transmitter with special petrol engine and alternator. The range which can be established on a 600-meter length is not less than 50 miles. The receiver embodies the theory of a direction finder, so that should the boat get into touch with a rescuing ship it will be able to guide her. A powerful electric light is fitted on the wireless compartment which would help other boats to keep in touch with the wireless boat at night and also form a mark for a rescuing ship in derkness. rescuing ship in darkness.

The endurance of the set depends only on the amount of petrol carried; and it is estimated that if signals were transmitted for 10 minutes in every hour, a gallon of petrol would suffice for 90 such transmissions.

A duplex telephone set which is de-signed to put ships within a short distance of land in touch with their offices is now on trial in co-operation with the Southampton post office. The sea distance covered by this installation is about 50 miles.

Linking Steam and Hydroelectric Plants in State Proposed to Save Coal

LAKE PLACID, N. Y., Ott. 8 (P)-Plans for the interconnection of eleg-tric systems to link New York State steam and hydroelectric plants from Montauk Point to Niagara Falls in what was termed the greatest power pool on the American Continent, were discussed in a report of the transmis-sion lines committee presented today before the annual convention of the Empire State Gas & Electric Associa-tion by E. P. Peck of the Ittica Gas & tion by E. P. Peck, of the Utica Gas & Electric Company

Advantages of the power pool have been demonstrated by existing interconnections, the report said, and addi-tional linkages would make immediately possible the saving of 137,000 tons of coal yearly and provide greater utilization of hydroelectricity.

Existing power plants, it was ex-plained, could be operated to develop an additional 250,000,000 kilowatt hours annually, the interconnections permitting continuous, economical and efficient operation of isolated waterpower units now undeveloped.

O. C. Merrill, secretary of the Federal Power Commission, told the convention the country now is in the period of the greatest water-power de-velopment it ever has known. A fed-eral policy of water-power development is insufficient, he declared, pleading for harmonious action between the Nation and the states in the whole field of pubic utilities.

This was clearly indicated by some of the results of last Schurday's games, as there was one instance where a large college cleven was defeated and several where the results were not nearly as one-sided, as were expected. On the other hand, there were one or two instances where teams showed better form than was expected, and which is pretty sure to give some of the bigger teams something to think about in the days to come.

If ever a major league pennant race has been devoid of upsets, it is the one in the National League that has just been brought to an end. Few persons outside of Manhattan, where any teams except the Glfmis are searcely "seef," actually believed that J. J. McGraw's curfit would fall to turn in its third straight championship. Cincinnati and Pittsburgh, it is true, had their hosts of supportegs, both in the middle west and in some castern cities as Arel, where the opinion holds that the Glants have had enough of such honors—that it is high time for baseball interest to be distributed more evenly among the eight cities of the circuit. But pennant victories are won on the ball field, not had for the wishing, and if the New York Nationals see a great demand for winning baseball, and act on that demand by acquiring more and more stellar talent, they are strictly within the letter of baseball law.

It is a dearth of good reserves that tells most heavily in a 154-game Marathon, after all. The Glants were so well fortified in this respect that they could dispense with their entire regular lineup and, many believe, still was proved that T. C. Jackson, the youthful Texan, was a great infielder when Capt. D. J. Bancroft temporarily was proved that T. C. Jackson, the youthful Texan, was a great infielder when Capt. D. J. Bancroft temporarily left the same. If one is to count James O'Connell as a regular outfielder along with E. F. Meusel and Ross Young, then McGraw has had three very capable substitutes in C. D. Stengel, W. A. Cunningham and Ralph Shinners. And so throughout the entire lineup. J. M. Bentley, the high-priced Baltimorean, can play a good game at first base, as well as pitch. If a team is only as strong as its substitutes, the Giants surely deserve to be champions of baseball.

champions of baseball,
Some fans are inclined to doubt the wisdom, of P. J. Moran, the Cincinnati pilot, in keeping L. A. Fonseca on the bench through most of the campalgn, in view of the fact that that player was

Moran, it is to be presumed, know what was best for the Reds and the fact the league's fourth best hitter in 1822. Moran, it is to be presumed, knew what was best for the Reds, and the fact that he ordered S. A. Bohne's retention in the infield was justification enough for that policy. Fonseci, incidentally, is a versatile star who might have been used to good advantage at any of the infield posts. While there is no use taking up a question of managerial judgment at this stage, it is pertifient to recall that the Reds acquired some badly needed pitching talent only when the season was about over, and that for practically the whole year Adolfo Luque was the only dependable boxman on the roster. The veteral E. J. Rixey worked well, but necessarily not as often as the Cuban right-hander. In view of the experience of the Reds and other unsuccessful contenders, past and present, it believes aspiring teams henceforth to look to their reserves before the season is our its last iap.

The Pittsburgh, team, which was not taken any too seriously to begin with, in view of its failures of the past few years, that just as expected. It finisped well up in the running, not high erough to disturb the champion Glants more than Liomentarily, yet, within full sight of the flag until the final weeks. That is proof enough that this team has the material, if only it could be welded into a determined, hard-going unit. Cutil that comes to pass, third-place appears to be the extent of Pittsburgh's speed.

An interesting battle was waged around the lower half of the first division, although the Cubs clearly out-distanced wither near neighbors. St. Louis fell from grace as compared with its 1922 rating—that is, it dropped from a tie for third place, to fifth in the present lineup. The Cardinals made a bold threat to dispossess the Cubs from the upper quartet in the final week of the season, but Manager William Killifer's entrant held on grimly. Brooklyn, sixth, showed sime improvement in the past few dars, taking the wind-up

An alligator and army mule ought to be two pretty formidable mascots.

Dickinson furnished Annapolis with a surprise Saturday as the secone at the end of the first half was 7 to 6 in favor of the former. It took some hard line plunging to give the Midshipmen a touchdown and victory in the second half.

There may be better football teams in the "Big Tan" than that displayed by Northwestern University, although that remains to be seen, but there seens little disposition to question that Northwestern thing to positive the finest turf on its football field. ment to Wilbert Robinson, who expected much more from his pitchers than he has received.

As an instance of how baseball enthusiasm falls off once the race is settled. Pitsburgh played Cincinnation at the latter town Saturday, before Just 124 speciators. That is the smallest crowd that has entered Redland Field these four years. Incidentally, H. L. Meadows' recent victory over Moran's team marked the second time this year that a pitcher has scored four triumphs over the Redsi J. L. Haines of St. Lov's was the other man who has beaten the rumers un that often.

Boston, holder of last place in '22, did succeed in relinquishing the cellar berth to Philadelphia in the final series at Braves Field. One of the Braves players, not to be outdone by G. H. Burns of the Red Sox, executed an unassisted triple play in the very last game. The notable individual this time was E. K. Padgett, a comparatively unheard-of substitute, who thus made the very most of a chance to exhibit his ability in the waning days of the season. The recruit's play, which came after a 14-inning Braves' victory, was made on a line drive by W. L. Holke in the fourth irming of the second shortened encounter. Phillies were on first and second and both were erased from the base paths.

Washington 5, Boston 2. Philadelphia 9, New York 7. Detroit 7, St. Louis 6. Cleveland 9, Chicago 6. Sixteen games in front of their near est competitor, the New York Yankees yesterday ended the season of 1923 with the clearest title to first place that an American League champion ever has gained. All opposition has looked alike to the players led by M. J. Huggins; in fact, so great has their as-gins; in fact, so great has their ascendancy been that the "race" just concluded has been one only in name. There was nothing to it but New York from the opening game on April 18.

For a few brief intervals it appeared as if some team would come forth and cause the Yankees at least to exert themselves. Philadelphia, back in the spring, threatened to be the team that would give New York whatever dispute the latter would encounter. But today the Athletics show in sixth place, and consider themselves fortunate to have finished that high. Cleveland seemed on its way toward another long siege of the Yankee fortress, as in 1921, but a bit of direct combat betwixt Yankees and Indians quickly put an end to that notion.

None of the other clubs had even a passing chance to approach to within hailing distance of the Huggins clan. It is singular that the habitual last-place entrant, Boston, continued to furnish New York the same stiff opposition as in 1922, but as the Red Sox failed to hold their own with any team other than the champions, this aptitude did not save them from another inglorious finish.

Detroit, which had been conceded a very real chance to break the Yankee pennant monopoly, did ascend to second place, thanks to a burst of speed in the final week. Cleveland—which, hoping for nothing better, clung to second place throughout most of the season—fell off its stride at just the wrong time, and T. R. Cobb's athletes, were there to take advantage of the opportunity. A double defeat at the hands of the Chicago White Sox served to pull the Indians down, and while Manager Tristram Speaker may ask for a play-off of a postponed contest, the chances are that his request will be denied, as such action would create something of a precedent where no championship was involved.

of a postponed contest, the chances are that his request will be denied, as such action would create something of a precedent where no championship was involved.

New York had in abundance which Cleveland shd Detroit both lacked—good pitchers. It is useless to bring up the fact that H. J. Ehmke, upon being sent to Boston, established the fines' record in the American League. Ehmke was not a winner for Detroit; neither was W. R. Collins, for whom he was traded. Manager Speaker of the Indians sees the need of bringing an entire new staff to the fore. Pitching, he believes, counts almost as heavily in a league season as in a World's Series; the Jankees had the pitching, the Indians did not, and therein lies the reason for Huggins' success. Brilliant work in the box, though not as outstanding as this year's, brought New York to an American League flag in 1922 and 1921 also; Cleveland had it in 1920, and so on down the long hne. It is a potent argument to favor of the min who delivers the the long line. It is a potent argument in favor of the man who delivers the in favor of the man who delivers the ball up to the plate.

The fifth place St. Louis Browns displayed to better advantage under J. P. Austin, manager pro tempore, than they had at any time earlier in the season for the deposed Lee Fohi. Third place was the Browns objective in the latter days, but it was a little too high a mark to shoot at after the poor start the team had made, and they were eventually displaced by Washington, even, for fourth.

The word is passed persistently that G. H. Sisler, peerless first baseman of the years preceding 1923, will lead the Browns next season. If this is true, and he proves a temption to his west.

the years preceding 1923, will lead the Browns next season. If this is true, and he proves as inspiring to his mates at, the helm as on the ball field, St. Louis will bear renewed watching.

Those Washington Senators did not fare so badly under Owen Bush, after all. From a sixth-place finish in 1922 to one in the first division this year has been a decided improvement, and the managerial venture of the former Detroit shortstop is undoubtedly a source of satisfaction to President C. C. Griffith of the Washington rlub. Bush received some excellent pitching, especially from the veteran Walter P. Johnson, who, in spite of his many years of service, has seldom been seen to better all-round advantage. Only a day or two before the assion dosed, Johnson established the year's strike-out mark for his circuit, 12 in a bingle the Senators' manager placed a lot of dependence.

Connie Mack says he is not displeased with the Athletics' rise from seventh, in 1922, to sixth the present year. In fact, if Philadelphia had not shown such an early-season disposition to crowd New York for the league lead, critics might today be praising the "new Athletics" for a marked improvement in play. But to trall and even embarrass the champions, only to descend to the neighborhood of its former low level, has proved too much of a contrast for many of the Philadelphia team's supporters. The Athletics were a colorful and at times even a brilliant team, one that played heads-up ball all the way, and never accepted defeat until the game was over. Manager Mack, after all is said and done, has had a successful season.

One team leader that might be justified in showing signs of disappointment is W. J. Gleason of the Chicago White One team leader that might be justified in showing signs of disappointment is W. J. Gleason of the Chicago White Sox. Many fans, particularly over on the South Side, figured that the veteran pilot had just the right combination of pitching, batting and speed to make it interesting for everyone. But while the speed was there and the batting in spots, Gleason's pitchers did not live up to the high hopes they had created a year ago. Seventh place was the result. All that need be said of Boston and the work of the retired leader. F. L. Chance, is that nobody expected the Red Sox to do very much in 1923; they had not the material, or, for many months, the incentive either. Ehmke, pitcher, and G. H. Burns, captain and star-batting first baseman, have been the redeeming figures in recent Red Sox baseball.

The picking is just getting well under way in west Texas, where the crop is always several weeks later than in central Texas on account of the late planting in the spring and the delayed seasons.

The rainfall during the latter part of August in west Texas has done much to bring the crop ost. Up to that time, the severe drouth that had prevailed seemingly had cut the cotton crop short and there would be many fields of hundreds of acres of cotton from which only one or two bales would be picked.

The late rains, however, have caused the cotton plants to take on new growth and the new crop that has been fruited now bears signs of maturing and opening before frost.

BUSINESS UNDULY HESITANT, SAYS PROFESSOR FISHER

PROFESSOR FISHER

Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale says:
During the first quarter of 1933
prices rose rapidly; during the second they fell rapidly, while during the third they have remained comparatively stable. The nine months as a whole thus make a fairly stable period.

As to the fourth quarter, the outlook seems to be for continued prosperity and a rising price level.

Business seems unduly cautious and hesitant. Confidence ought gradually to increase, causing business expansion, freer borrowing of money, and a consequent gradual bidding up of prices.

European conditions constitute a

European conditions constitute a drag on our prosperity, especially for the farmer, but the burden will be distributed and readjusted, while it is not likely to be greatly increased.

CURRENT STEEL BUYING VOLUME NOT AT NORMAL

Production Pace Diminishes, With Pronounced Price Cuts in Raw Materials

in Raw Materials

NEW YORK, Oct. 8 (Special)—There is as yet no change for the better in the steel industry.

Production is being curtailed at a steady rate, further price reductions have been made and the volume of huying, although slightly better than during midsummer, is not up to normal for this time of the year.

Production has been cut at the rate of 2 per cent of capacity per week for the last several weeks, and the industry in general is now working at a 73 per cent pace, compared with 75 per cent a week ago.

Pig iron production figures for September showed a decline of 6 per cent over the previous month, and steel over the previous decline. It is predicted that the unfilled orders of the United States Steel Corporation will reveal a drop of 250,000 to 350,000 tons in September, compared with a 500,000-ton falling off in August.

Raw Materials Unstable

Raw Materials Unstable

The price recessions are still the most pronounced in the raw materials, but more finished steel quotations have appeared at lower levels. As far as is known, however, the prices of the United States Steel Corporation are beling held firm and Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, said last week that his companies were not considezing price reductions at this time.

New York sales representatives report that they have been making better than offices in several other districts. In Philadelphia, for instance, trade depends to the greatest extent on the large tonnage users such as the railroads, while in New York buyers are of a more miscellaneous character. Generally speaking the large tonnage buyers have withdrawn from the trade, so that centers such as Philadelphia are unusually quiet.

Based on standards of business last spring the present is woefully flat. Railroads are not buying the large rail tonnages of a year ago and there is and absence of inquiries and orders for rolling stock.

Business in building steel is quiet, the largest pending inquiry being for 4000 tons for a power plant at Mishawaka, Ind., whereas 10,000-ton inquiries are onsidered big business.

The automobile makers are not ordering much new steel and one prominent maker has held up singments on steel previously, ordered.

An encouraging feature of the situa-tion is that consumers are keeping their stocks at a low point, and there is no oversupply in their hands. Neither have there been many cancellations of con-tracts. Prices of finished steel have held remarkably firm, considering conditions, and they make a satisfactory margin of profit. and they make a satisfactory margin of profit.

There was a net loss of 15 blast furnaces in September and a total of 5 furnaces since the peak of pig fron production in May. The total output for September was 2,125,512 tons and furnaces were producing at the same rate as last January. Most of the failing off of production last month was at the furnaces of the steel makers, rather than at the plants of the strictly merchant furnaces. This month it is probable that several of the merchant furnaces will be blown out or banked.

Pig iron prices fell about $1 a ton month it as process will be blown out the merchant furnaces will be blown out or banked.

Pig tron prices fell about $1 a ton last week, and in the northeast iron is $9 a ton below the peak of the year. Eastern Pennsylvania and Buffalo iron may be bought at $23 base; Virginia iron at $24. Chicago at $25. Birmingham at $20, and Valley iron at $24. There is a dearth of iron inquiries, and sales though a few purchases have been made by those who realize that pig iron is at bargain levels. One disturbing factor is that foundries are not melting as much iron as during the summer, and for the first time there is an overabundance of labor, this being especially noticed among the foundries of New England and New Jersey. The latest price concessions in finished steel apply to bands, hoops and shot-rolled flats, which have dropped hot-rolled flats.

is the latest price concession of the latest price of the latest p tations.

It is a common practice for consumers to divide business among the larger companies and the smaller ones. Though they wish to have advantage of the lower prices of the smaller makers, they wish to keep in favor with the larger companies in case a shortage of steel develops in the future.

wish to keep in favor with the larger companies in case a shortage of steel develops in the future.

Japanese Orders Light

Japanese business is slow in coming to American makers and the latest development is the sale by German makers of nails and wire. The British have been getting the bulk of the galvanized sheet business. It is estimated that American makers have so far booked 50,000 tons of steel for Japan for rebuilding purposes, though one steel exporter places this figure as low as 20,000 tons.

The steel trade was interested last week in the possibility of the formation of a Government buying, commission by Japan. This would tend to prevent speculation in steel and other materials and would provide for an equitable distribution of steel orders among the American makers, possibly pro rata according to their capacity.

In fact a reconstruction board has been established by Japanese Imperial ordinance, effective Oct. 1. This board embraces six bureaux, one devoted to construction materials and under this would come the buying commission, if formed.

Anticipating the forming of such a buying commission one of the prominent Japanese importers and exporters last week sent questionnalies to the chief steel companies in order to gather data as to capacity, prices, speed of deliveries, willingness to accept Japanese-business and liberality of terms.

The forming of such a commission would stife speculation which has been would in a producers and sellers were depressed. Though present consumption is absorbling the heavy production there is the fear that it will not be able to do so before long. Prices are only 1 cent a pound higher than when the wholesale shutting down

The Opinion of Teachers of English Regarding the Classics They Teach

A concluded in which teachers of English were asked their opinions of the classics which they are required to teach. The investigation brought responses from 268 teachers of English in the North Central Association high schools in the State of Wisconsin. Unsatisfactory Books

The negative side of the question is less easy to present concisely and, in considering it, it seems necessary to divide the unsatisfactory group into two parts which we may designate as the actively and passively unsatisfactory books.

Examining the latter group first it may be stated that Irving's "Alhambra" did not receive one favorable or unfavorable vote. Yet it is carried on a sufficient number of lists to warrant its place in this questionnaire. "Pippa Passes" and "Cavalier Tunes," "Henry Esmond," Franklin's Autobiography, and "Quentin Durward" did not receive and "Quentin Durward" and not received a single satisfactory vote, but, on the other hand, the Browning poems and "Quentin Durward" received only two unsatisfactory votes, so the general attitude toward them seems to be one of utter indifference.

As the compiler of these statistics, I have no desire to force my deduc-tions upon the individual reader. I desire merely to state the facts as they exist. Doubtless many different con-clusions may be arrived at. In some cases the books may not be suited to the class to which they are presented. Again, the teacher in charge may not be working with material which she is best fitted to handle. Let me quote you, for example, the reason given in the one unfavorable reason given in the one unfavorable response to "Silas Marnet". I give it verbatim: "I have had difficulty in keeping it from lag-

Vacation Trips in Alsace as Scholarship Rewards

NA certain morning early in August, the long platform of the Strasbourg station was lined with children. They were talking to mothers and aunts in high-pitched, rapid French, being kissed on both cheeks, or dodging in and out looking for their friends. They were the honor pupils from the Strasbourg schools, who were being taken, as a reward of scholarship, up to the fabled city of the educated classes in the underof scholarship, up to the fabled city of Paris. The shouting from train windows as the cars pulled out reminded one of the troop trains in the work for; a trip to Paris or to the northwest coast. The Government has started it since the war and it has become so popular that newspapers and other private organizations are helping with the scheme. Most of the children are from 12 to 15 years old; many of them peasants living on farms who might never know what the mother country of France means. They go to Paris and are shown all the great pictures, the buildings and monuments which make history real to them. Some of them, the very best scholars, continue from Paris up to the coast for a seashore outing. The lengtr of these free tours varies from two weeks to a month according to the ability which the pupil has shown

Attached to the recommendations were the head teacher's and medical officer's reports. But the child's school friends had not done with her yet. The which no amount of school teaching

from an Advertiser

Colonel William F. Thorpe, superintendent of Thorpe Academy, Lake Forest, Illinois,

"We appreciate the good work that The Christian Science Monitor is doing and we are glad of this opportunity to uphold good, clean journalism. The Monitor is the only paper that we permit our boys at Thorpe Academy to read, as we are attempting to keep the blaring red and yellow journals away from these boys."

In many schools, and many homes, The Christian Science Monitor is welcomed daily, because it publishes the clean, constructive, really worth-while news of all the world, together with artistic and critical articles of permanent value.

As an advertising medium the value of the Monitor is attested by the fact that so many schools and colleges renew their advertising from season to season.

ART NEWS AND COMMENT

Foreign and Domestic Art in First Exhibitions of New York Season

New York, Oct. 6 LTHOUGH the mid-September showing of David Burliuk's Japanese paintings at the Art Center and the "Art-in-Traders" display of decerative art which was opened last week on the roof of the Waldorf-Astoria were the first shots fired in honor of the nay season, the first days of October see the galleries opening in considerable numbers. The principal attraction for art lovers is the Ballard collection of russ now on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum An interesting and varied group of painters from New Mexico is showing at the Montross Galleries; Ettore Caser, with his decorative and colorful canvases, is at the Ferargil Galleries; Sidney E. Dickinson lines the walls of the Milch Galleries with his vivid portraits and studies, and resident some 10 years or more in Massachusetts. His earliest impressions were of the picturesque canals and fishing boats of Chioggia, that outlying town of the Venetian lagoons; and his artistic youth was spent in Venice, where he studied with Marius Pictor and with the great masters who live on in their wonderful paintings so profusely scattered through church, palace, and gallery. The Venetian heritage of opulent and glowing color and of a pictorial outlook at once romantic and imaginative came naturally to this young painter, became so completely his that, even after a decade passed in the more neutral environs of Boston, the same sequence of tones and colors pass across his canvases as in the Adriatic days.

Ettore Caser, Romantic

The most pretentious of Mr. Caser's offerings for metropolitan consideration is his "Colonial Landscape," a in the full panoply of autumn splendor, with a sky of rich blues broken by swelling, sun-flushed cumuli, while in the foreground runs a sapphire stream, furrowing its way through the tawny meadow lands where groups of peasants make decorative defile after the day's work. It is when the human figure is made to serve as harmonious adjunct to nature, as in his Venetian figure is made to serve as harmonious adjunct to nature, as in his Venetian scenes, that Mr. Caser is most happy

But Dwight C. Sturges is showing for the first time anywhere two new plates, "The Hill Top" and "The West Winfodw." They illustrate his skill in appropriately handling exteriors and interiors, and carrying further than ever the simplicity of final effect, to which he characteristically attains.

Certain limitations of technique and form, certain combinations of color militate against his very genuine feeling for poetic and allegorical painting when employing the human figure on a large scale; only in his "Procession" do the elements of representation attain the regulsite fusion for complete harmony of style and subject.

In striking contrast to the fanciful visions of the Venetian Caser are the portraits by the American Dickinson portraits by the American Dickinson at Milch's. This young painter, Con-necticut born and a pupil of Bridge-man, Volk and Chase, has attained a egree of verisimilitude in his work that is startling. He sticks close emphatic form, and usually sets the bjects of his pictorial concern in an ancompromising flood of white light. Little is left to the imagination, and. consequently, only under the most fortunate circumstances does he near the really impressive goal he has in mind. When felicitous pose of the sit-ter or happy arrangement of costume, accessory and background permit, Mr. Dickinson's results are decidedly imposing, as, for example, in increase of Paul Arndt; here the distinguished arrangement is enhanced by a freer, less meticulous handling and the tall. handsome subject, standing comments a somber sky, cloak drawn the white of his about his shoulders-the white of his open shirt and slender hands balancing the luminous head—has comething of the look of a fine "old master" in quality and design.

Sidney E. Dickinson

Whenever Mr. Dickinson sends one of his canvases to the academy, of which he is an associate member, invariably succeeds in capturing the gallery by the very self-confidence of his assertive style, although he is one of those painters who strike 10 but once every so often and in between times fall into more or less routine ways. The unpleasant pallor that so often complexions his sitters and the curious red shadows that only serve to enhance this "blancheur" belittle his vivid sense of characterization. When linked to a fiery style, such as El Greco's, these ashen chromatics carry weight and conviction, but for re-strained portraiture they serve no ap-parent purpose. Indeed, the tremendous realism of this painter calls out for moderation, for a tonal veil, such as Whistler used to wrap his figures in. Although Mr. Dickinson is repre-sented in the Corcoran Gallery of Ast, the Chicago Art Institute, and the St. Louis Museum, he is as yet at the threshold of his career; and since these individual inclinations are but the man himself projected into his work, much will be rightly expected of him as the years bring their gifts of mallow fruitage, his heaftening are of mellow fruitage; his beginnings are fixed solid as a rock and will bear much superstruction.

The pictorial appeal of New Mexico continues to attract artists to its spatial tracts, where aboriginal cul-ture still exerts its picturesque and unique charm. A newly formed group of eight artists is at the Montross ture still exerts its plcturesque and unique charm. A newly formed group of eight artists is at the Montross Galleries for October, headed by the always decorative and well-known E. L. Blumenschein. His three contributions are small, as in fact all the pictures are, and are not as arresting as many of his previous canvases seen in New York: they are meaty, however, filled with informing fact and with splendid form and color. "Dance at Taos" shows rows of Indians in ceremonial alignment, making long lines of faming reds and ochers in their blankets and tribal fixings, and "Indian Oven" has a foreground group of natives in the artist's compressed and vivid manner, while for the major part of the canvas a turbulent, fantastic sky, shot with strange lights, sweeps up and away in cataclysmic style.

Watter Ufer, also a well-known exhibitor, sends three interesting versons of New Mexican dwellings and natives, pale in color but full of light. Victor Higgins handles the magnificent spruce trees of this region with cent spruce trees of this region with imagination and style; F. G. Applegate, a potter from Trenton, N. J., who broke away three years ago to join the pioneers of the southwest, is seen for the first time as a dramatic interpretary of Indian correspondent interpreter of Indian ceremonies. W. Penhallow Henderson revels in the full color values of the open spaces; B. J. O. Nordfeldt handles native's themes with a rude and mod-ern frankness; J. G. Bakos finds inthe walls of the Milch Galleries with his vivid portraits and studies, and the commodious Anderson Galleries are filled with a collection of modern German art brought to America by Dr. W. R. Valentiner.

Mr. Caser is an Italian artist, now resident some 10 years or more in Massachusetts. His earliest impression of expression that has come to be a recognized characteristic of the commodities. It it a presumptuous thing, the matter of, in a sense, guaranteeing the writer an abstract of his abilities. Hundreds of blanks were returned, hundreds of abstracts have been completed—and the school's enrollment probably will be double this year what it was last. Of the hundreds, apparently none has failed to take the matter seriously. And none could be more serious than Mr. Kurtzworth, who is convinced that the plan has demonstrated its useful-ness despite its inclusive sweep and obvious tendency to induce its subjects to return a report somewhat colored by desire rather than strictly confined to fact. The very fact that desire so strongly shows enables Mr. Kurtz-worth the better to determine the particular artistic path likely to prove ost satisfactory and most profitable,

The questionnaire is part of the director's plan to hitch art directly to business and the public generally by emphasizing its practical aspects— commercial design, decoration, the ster, landscaping, architecture, and the like. He follows up his argument that art is truly useful with a restatement of the famous proposition concerning the permanence of energy that "no art training is ever lost."
"An art education is always useful, never wasted, and can be diverted into many other fields," he declares.

those of Sydney.

The reasons for this are climatic and temperamental, the northern of the two communities being more volatile and curious and the southern more cautious and critical. In Sydney, people went again and again to see what they regarded as novelties, in Melbourge the better pictures were decided upon and bought, almost on the opening of the show and the novelties, the derniers cris, weighed and found wanting in permanent qualities.

One advantage of a relatively small community is that an event of this kinds looms large in the public eye and is a main topic of talk. The part of answering difficult questions falls to the artist and he has to keep his wits about him in replying satisfactorily to one who "never saw a purple" and temperamental, the northern of themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselves rarely see the merit of their accidental discoveries, but harp themselve strate certain hitherto undemonstrated

Science Monitor chronicles important events in the world of art, and presents, in harmonious relation, advertisements appropriate to the news contents of the page.

Harmony

Other pages of the Monitor offer similarly related messages. The Educational Page, twice a week, contains advertisements of highclass schools; the Book Page, advertisements of publishers and bookstores; the Household Page, many kinds of merchandise especially interesting to the housewife; the Music Page, announcements of music publishers and music teachers.

Every day advertisements of acceptable theatrical productions and motion pictures appear on pages which contain related news and comment.

Thus The Christian Science Monitor seeks to express harmony in its relations with its advertisers, and to serve their interests. We have had many proofs that this same friendly desire is manifested by Monitor readers, who seek out those establishments which advertise in the Monitor, and make known the reason for their patronage.

"The Hilltop," From Etching by Dwight C. Sturges

The large main gallery, with its soft natural lighting and walls of gray mat, makes a satisfying setting for mat, makes a satisfying setting for pictures ranging widely in their color keys. Careful hanging of this invited show keeps together pictures that help rather than fight each other. King Adland's Daughter SomeTime I shall (so I think) read King Estmere held himself superior to feminine charm: he could not, on the spur of the moment, think of any lady who seemed quite suitable. Said brother Adler, upon a time purchased with that intention, but have not yet accomplished it. So one occasionally buys a book, puts it on the shelf, takes it down once in a great while for a few minutes, and acquires as it were a casual acquaintance with it. Such behavior on my part is a little fraction of the "immortality" that Bishop Percy obtained for ancient bards-though their names are as vanished as their harpswhose work might have been quite forgotten without him; and so it happened the other day that I took down the Reliques, and read with considerable pleasure about King Estmere.

King Estmere, it seems, was a King in "merry England" in those fabulous times that we call the "Dark Ages": indeed, the introductory note tells me that the tale may well be the oldest of all the tales that Bishop Percy preserved for posterity. It was an old, old tale, no doubt, when some unknown scribe set it in writing, probably in the early fifteenth century, and gave it such permanent form as made it part of the Manuscript Folio that was the nucleus of Percy's collection. One may therefore fairly call it quaint, with many a word that would be meaningless to me without the glossary; contemporary, indeed, with the medieval romances in which Sir This and tures. Such ancient tales have a marionette quality: we are no more disturbed, or even astonished, when one character cuts off another's head than we would be at a puppet show.

"Hearken to me, gentlemen, Come and you shall heare; Ile tell you of two of the boldest brethren

That ever born y-were."

And bold enough they were, Estmere the King and his younger brother Adler, who seems to my reading to have been the brighter of the two. And therefore of that foule paynim wee neede not stande in doubte.

King Estmere and brother Adler sat in the King's hall, and conversa-tion fell upon matrimony. Said

"When will ye marry a wyfe, brother, A wyfe to gladd us all?"

"Then bespake him Kyng Estmere, And answered him hastilee;
'I know not that ladye in any lande That is able to marry with mee.'

This, however, did not mean that

"'Kyng Adland hath a daughter brother,
Men call her bright and sheene;
If I were kyng here in your stead,
That ladye shold be queen."

The thought of this bright and shining lady immediately interested King Estmere. He was all for sending a messenger to King Alland's court (wherever that was) immediately, but his brother advised that the two of them go in person. So off they rode, and presently there they were. Young Adler addressed King Adland:

'You have a daughter,' sayd Adler yonge, 'Men call her bright and sheene; My brother, wold marrye her to his

Of Englande to be queene."

But already, it appeared, the King of Spain, in those days a "Paynim," which places our tales sometime during the Moorish occupancy, had already communicated the same desire to King Adland, and been refused by the lady It dismayed King Adland, who seems not to have been a very heroic figure to think what might happen if the King of Spain heard of her marrying anybody else.

Things happen quickly in ancient ballads. When King Estmere saw King Adland's daughter, and King Adland's daughter saw him, there was no doubt at all about how they felt. Nor about how King Adland felt.

"Then bespake her father deare: 'My daughter I saye naye; Remember well the Kyng of Spayne, What he sayd yesterdaye.

The younger generation had no such apprehensions.

'Your castles and your towres

'Plyght me your troth nowe, Kyng Estmere, By heaven and your righte hande,

And make me queene of your land.'

"Then Kyng Estmere he plight his

By heaven and his righte hand, That he wold marrye her to his wyfe, And make her queene of his land."

So off they rode, Estmere and brother Adler, home to make ready for the wedding; and hardly were they a mile away when a messenger from the King's daughter came after them. For who had arrived at the castle but that same undesirable King of Spain? And what his intention but to marry King Adland's daughter one day, and carry her home the next?

As usual in an emergency King Estmere consulted his brother Adler, who shrewdly suggested that they disguise themselves respectively as a the castle. Presently they were in the hall, where the King of Spain sat beside King Adland's daughter—for king Adland, as you may imagine, had let him in and was hurrying on the wedding—and King Estmere touched his here.

The castle proper which has been adapted to the neighborhood as we many Northern races it is often used for the seven brilliant stars of the Great Bear. Even the Biblical allusion to "The Seven Stars," as our own Angle-Saxon ancestral Sifunsterri, does not necessarily indicate the Pleiades: many consider the seven great planets to be meant. There is a Shetland rune, common to all the north Norway, known as the rune of savens, and of which one of the invocatory lines is "And by da seven shipers."

All kinds of interpretation have explained this, from the obvious "seven planets," or else the Plelades, to the Seven Candlesticks of Revelation and I know not what besides. I have again and again asked fisher-folk or others from the Orkneys and Shetlands, and in all but one or two instances the answer has clearly indicated the Great Bear, occasionally Polaris and the Ursine Arcturus and their nearest brilliant "shiners." Again, Cranarain, one of the Gaelic names for the Pleiades, is, perhaps, as often applied to the Great Bear: the curious legend of the Baker's Shovel.—Fina Macleod, in "Winter Stars."

BOSTON, MONDAY, OCTOBER 8, 1923

EDITORIALS

THE League of Nations remains, in spite of demisuccesses and semi-failures, the world's greatest guarantee against war. Lately it has been menaced in its very existence.

Give the League Time

There have been threats of withdrawal on the part of this nation and of that, and it is obvious that, if once the process of dislocation set in, secession would rapidly follow secession. It is imperative for Europe, in the opinion of Europe's most enlightened thinkers, that at all costs the League be saved. If it disappears then there is a frank reversionto the idea of force in the settlement of international quarrels. The League, however imperfectly, stands for justice and peace. Its absence, in the present European condition, infallibly means injustice and war.

Many who supported the conception and organization of the League in the early stages confess to a certain disappointment. They naturally contrast the performance, and above all the general exhibition of feebleness and of a desire for a compromise on essential basic ideas, with the high hopes which were entertained in 1919, when it was thought that automatically, without question, disputes would be quietly referred to the League and as quietly settled to everybody's satisfaction.

It was perhaps foolish to suppose that there would be this sudden and radical change in the conduct of the world's affairs. It should have been realized that an effective league, in the sense in which it was intended, would be a plant of slow growth. It should have been foreseen that the League would have to be nursed along to perfection, that its first movements would be halting and perhaps even futile, that it would have to learn by experience and practice, that it would have to gain the confidence of the nations gradually. Indeed, the main need of the League is time.

It would be possible to make out a good case for the actual achievements of the League. It would be possible to make out a good case for the utter failures of the League. One can point to the case of Austria restored by the League to possible conditions of existence. One can point to the Ruhr-a hole out of which the wealth of Europe is running fast-a hole that the League has feared to caulk. There is the doubtful wisdom of the partition of Upper Silesia by the League and there is the deliberate defiance of Signor Mussolini in the affair of Corfu-a challenge which was taken up, if at all, with extreme half-heartedness.

One can thus argue both for and against the League -but the discussion would be idle. Whether it has done little or much, whether it has a big balance of bad or good to its credit, is of no importance. The real point is that it is as yet in the embryopic stage. To scrap it would be to surrender all prospect of better international relations. To foster it (still think all the best Europeans) is to preserve the only machinery which is capable of averting war, of delaying the recourse to extreme measures. The League is there-something to develop. Criticize it if you please-and it is indeed open to criticism-regard it as of small utility at present—but do not forget that it is undeniably a potential peacemaker.

That is the truth about the League which it is necessary to bear in mind. It would be absurd to judge a man by his infant days. Achievement is not, as we are now apt to think, the first thing, but rather the last thing, and a great deal has led up to every achievement in no matter what sphere. In considering the League we are beginning not to ask what it may do or what it will, if it is kept in being, certainly do in the future: we ask what it has done in the past. And that past is one of four Stevenson attered the comic complaint of the young man who was twenty-one and had not yet compiled a new dictionary! There are today many people who are asking for a dictionary from a child of four. First let the child grow up. Moreover it must never be forgotten that the League does not yet number among its members the three great nations of Russia, Germany, and America, to say nothing of other smaller peoples.

There is no need to repeat here the arguments which may be used in favor of American aid in the regulation of the post-war problems and in the future good management of the world. Whether America should enter this League or another reorganized league or association of nations, is a political matter about which we may yet hear much. But the immediate point is that America should not expect too much of a League which is not only in its infancy, but which is deprived of the assistance which it had an undoubted right to expect from America, since the United States took a prominent part in its formation. It is precisely the assistance that is lacking that would be of the greatest weight and influence.

It may not be necessary to apologize for the League. We believe the League is doing very well. But whether it is doing well or not, is not the question. The thing to remember is that it needs time.

To THE American cow-it must indeed seem that comparisons are odious. Recently she has been made to appear at a disadvantage when her performances have been gauged by the measure set by her cousins and aunts in some of the countries of Europe. All sorts of tables and figures have been presented to show that the American cow, evidently with equal opportunities enjoyed by others of her kind, has proved herself a slacker on the job. It is apparent that explanations, if any can be made, are in order. If anything can be said to excuse her, it should be said now.

Have the processes of Americanization as applied to the cow and her family failed? And if there has been failure, is it due to the disinclination of the cow as a class to respond to those conditions and influences to which she has been subjected? It should not be forgotten that the vast majority of the members of the domesticated herds on American farms are the direct or collateral descendants of progenitors imported from the pastures of European countries. It no doubt was the hope of these pioneers that they were to find, in the land of their adoption, great opportunities for advancement. It perhaps was said of them that in time to come, they, or their followers, would build up a new bovine aristocracy, surpassing in prestige that of all the Devons, the Jerseys, the Ayrshires, the Durhams, the Holstein-Friesians, and all the others.

The disclosures, if the showing made is correct, as it undoubtedly is, should cause thoughtful Americans to pause and ponder their import. Have the herds of alien, cattle, like the millions of alien peoples, been left too much to their own devices in the march which seemed so full of promise? Or, worse than that, have American methods been proved to be inefficient even to support and encourage the maintenance of that standard of excellence once reached?

RECENT conferences at the White House between President Coolidge and some of the western senators and representatives in Congress have served to emphasize what has long been recognized as the economic plight of wheat growers, particularly, in the middle western states. Party leaders sympathetic with the Administration are quite naturally seeking a way to stop the gap which, it is declared, renders the growing of wheat, under present conditions, economically impossible. It is explained that the farmer, unless he is to receive a higher price for his wheat, must in some way be enabled to buy tools and machinery, and clothing and necessary foods, more cheaply than at present, and that the burden of taxes imposed by federal, state, and local authorities must be lightened.

Wheat Prices and Bread Prices

The interested wage-earner in the city may well inquire, with all the talk of cheap wheat and cheap farm products of all kinds, why it is that he and his family are compelled to pay war prices for bread at the bakery or grocery, and why it is that flour in bulk, at least at retail, is still sold at so high a figure. The baker and the grocer will explain, and quite convincingly, that high wage scales in shops and stores, higher fuel costs, higher rents and higher distributing costs combine to make impossible any reduction in the selling price of bread, which remains practically where it was when wheat was selling at $2.50

Intimations are that President Coolidge, urged to call a special session of Congress to deal with the farmer's economic problem, believes that a legislative plan, if it is possible to devise one, be worked out in advance if it is decided to convene Congress. The precaution would be wise. It is not easy to forecast just what form this remedial legislation should take, unless it is proposed to provide definite channels for co-operative marketing. To arbitrarily establish an upset price for wheat, for instance, in the absence of a world emergency similar to that existing at the time of the recent war, would be a courageous, if not actually a hazardous, undertaking. The American farmer does not sell all of his wheat crop at home. He must follow it, at least theoretically, into the markets of the world, where it is sold in competition with grain from other countries.

The manufacturers who sell their products to the farmers would oppose, and quite properly, any legislation which would seek to compel them to furnish tools and machinery at a fixed maximum price without assuring them relief from high fuel costs and prevailing freight and labor schedules.

There remains the hopeful promise of some practical taken on wheat and flour before the bread reaches the consumer's table. The same is true of those commodities which the farmers buy. Co-operative marketing, if it is to be beneficial to all concerned, must include the free movement of products in both directions, with the consequent elimination of many profiteering middlemen. Horizontal advances in the prices of wheat and other products of the farm, attempted at the behest of any faction or bloc, can hardly be expected to bring the permanent general relief earnestly sought.

THERE has been little discussion in Canada of the Imperial tariff proposals that have lately been revived

Canadian

View of

Tariff

in the United Kingdom. Premier Mackenzie King can on the whole be said to reflect the general opinion of the Dominion, however, in maintaining that the question of British tariff policy is entirely one for the Parliament at Westminster to deal with. The British people in 1906 made it evident at the polls that they were unwilling to depart from the policy of free trade with all nations for the sake of introducing the more limited policy of free trade only with nations under the British flag. There may have been some movement since the war toward the belief in Imperial tariff preference; but when the question comes up for discussion at the Imperial Economic Conference in London this month, the Prime Minister of Canada can be reckoned upon to refrain from urging any tariff policy upon Great Britain.

Manufacturers in Canada would welcome any preference that the British Parliament might decide to give to Dominion goods, by the imposition of customs duties on imported goods from other countries. But, at the same time, the protectionist Canadian manufacturers are opposed to any advance toward freer trade within the Empire through the further lowering of the Canadian tariff. The attitude of the prairie provinces, on the other hand, and of agricultural constituencies, as expressed in the platform of the Progressive Party at the last Dominion elections, is in favor of freer trade with Great Britain—through the gradual reduction of the tariff on

But there is also a strong desire for freer trade with the United States, and it is not confined to the western provinces. The present Finance Minister of Canada. W. S. Fielding, may be said to reflect the freer trade sentiment of Nova Scotia, and he is not only the originator of preferential tariffs that lead in the direction of freer trade with Great Britain, but also the leading spokesman for reciprocity with the United States.

A British statesman, Lord Emmott, accurately ex-pressed Canada's point of view after the parliamentary Empire tour just before the war, when he spoke of the strong attachment shown to the British Empire, and added: "At the same time I saw no reason to suppose that, broadly speaking, the minds of the men in the Dominions are in favor of steps being taken in the immediate future toward closer organic union. It is their own freedom to manage their own internal affairs in their own way that they value most." Whatever modification of this attitude may be reflected by the Prime Minister of Australia, Canada shows no inclination to depart from the position of autonomy in tariff policy.

IT HAS been said that "there is a pleasure in painting which none but painters know." It is no less true that as a

there is a pleasure in collecting which none but collectors know, with the qualification that something depends on what is collected. The man who collected comics might have the fun of the sport, but he would gain nothing else by it. The man whose hobby is postage stamps has the satisfaction of knowing that he can never attain perfection, but otherwise his fun is not more profitable. The man to whom art is the inspiration, however, enjoys not simply the sport of collecting, but the finer pleasure that art gives.

The people whose definition of sport is a game out-ofdoors played with a ball or a horse usually have a contempt for the lounger in print or book shops. The lounger is as secure in his belief that he has by far the best of it, as indeed he has. Paintings are for the fortunate few, their prices soaring to a millionaire standard. Sculpture is for these who live in palaces or have the means and the land to build galleries. But prints, save for notable exceptions, are within the reach of anybody with a reasonable income, some knowledge of the history of art, and a flair for the beautiful and the rare. In this interest is enough to keep a man occupied and happy during his every leisure moment. To see him rejoicing in his portfolios and drawers of treasures, showing them with pride to the sympathetic, ever seeking to perfect what he has, is to agree with him that he is better off than that other sportsman knocking, or kicking, or throwing a ball round a field.

It is an absorbing game because without end or limit. From the print, the pursuit passes on to the artist, and all that relates to him has its value. Books about him, letters from, or to, him, newspaper articles and noticeseverything. The hunt can go on month after month, year after year. Collections of the kind that exist in, or out of, museums, explain how important they can become and how much they add to our knowledge of an artist and his age. Had a contemporary of Rembrandt left such a collection to the world, how great would be the world's gratitude today. It may seem trivial at the moment, a glorification of gossip, but gossip about the great in the course of centuries is dignified into history. There would be less digging up of old scandals, less contorting and inventing of facts, were such collections more numerous. As it is, for one man who delights in the sport of collecting, thousands crowd to the football game and the polo match. But the collector remains convinced of the wisdom of his choice, sure of the more enduring pleasure that will come of the sport to which he devotes his time and his energy.

Editorial Notes

HAVING answered, satisfactorily to himself, the request for information from Rushville, Ill., regarding the number of South American llamas in the city zoo in Nashua, N. H., by vouchsafing the fact that, not having a zoo, it had no South American llamas, the city elerk of Nashua may yet find himself in difficulties. One remembers the young man who, in an excess of shyness at his first ball, asked his partner, for want of a better subject of conversation, "Does you brother like cheese?" On being assured that the lady in question had no brother, he waited a moment, and then asked, "If you had a brother, do you think he would like cheese?". Just so, "If Nashua had a zoo, Mr. City Clerk, do you think it would house any South American llamas?

A short statement of the philosophy of his life made in Forbes Magazine by James Couzens might to advantage be studied by many-and especially by those who complain that they never have had an opportunity. In it he said in part: "The right kind of man, with the right kihd of record, seldom has to seek position or office. Usually the office seeks him." This reminds one of the famous aphorism about big positions gravitating to the men who can handle them, and responsibility to the man who knows how.

WHETHER every Englishman will agree with him is, of course, a question, but certainly every American appreciates what Mr. Lloyd George said in New York about the real founder of the British Empire being George Washington. He explained his statement on the ground that Washington taught the lesson of democracy, and that that lesson had been the salvation of the British Empire. It should not be forgotten, however, that Anglo-Saxon democracy owes a great debt to Magna Charta. . .

Autumn Landscapes By ERNEST H. WILSON

[Mr. Wilson has been termed the plant scout of the Arnold Arboretum, which is connected with Harvard University. About a year ago he returned from a two years' trip, in the course of which he traveled 100,000 miles, taken in the interests of the

THIS year, thanks to the long summer drought, the autumn tints are early and exceptionally brilliant. The countryside of Massachusetts is now everywhere a resplendent feast of colorful beauty, richly spread. On all sides autumn glory reigns supreme. No long journey is necessary to enjoy its loveliness to the heart's content, for every road in every direction leads to it. Those who motor, if they have eyes to see. can enjoy scenes of beauty unsurpassed by any landscape of similar character the world over.

The favorite sugar maple, with its shades of yellow, orange, and scarlet, is the delight of many a roadside, and the yellow of the white elm, grandest of avenue trees, and of the black birch, are not to be denied. The noble white ash, with its crown of chocolate and purple, stands out unique among trees. The sassafras, decked in yellow, orange, and all shades of red to crimson, compels admiration from a distance and brings a lover of beauty to his knees. The tupelo, with its brilliant mantle, flamingly illumines, here and there, the woodland depths.

In some localities the flowering dogwood is one of the most brilliantly colored of the lesser trees, displaying all shades of red to crimson and fading to pink. The clear yellow tints of tangled masses of greenbrier contrast with the scarlet to ruby-red of the Virginia creeper, clinging to bowlder and tree trunk. Asters-white, blue, and purple-challenge the yellow of the goldenrods in meadow, swamp, glade, and roadside, and the ferns, grasses, and sedges, tinted yellow, yellow-brown, and rose-violet, add to the feast of wayside beauty. Of colorful luxuriance what more can a people ask than the lavish display of Massachusetts landscape? But, I would ask ye fortunate folk, do you fully appreciate the rich birthright which is yours?

In Japan, where an intense love of nature is innate among all classes, there prevails a custom which might well be adopted in other lands. The beauty spots in that country are many and are justly celebrated in poetry and song. In October, when the woods assume their autumn splendor, children from primary and secondary schools, high schools, and colleges, with their teachers and professors, make excursions of three or four days' duration to noted places and revel in the feast of color. The railways offer cheap fares and from all the large towns and cities children, youths and maidens journey to the mountain woods. In the autumn in the Nikko region I have seen thousands of scholars, boys and girls, varying from eight to twenty years of age (and a happy, orderly throng they were) enjoying to the full the scenery.

But wherefore and why all-this gay autumnal apparel? Is it the handiwork of the charming fairies and wood nymphs of our childhood beliefs and nursery days? Surely some guiding hand must have prepared the wondrous scene!

Those skilled in the mysteries of organic chemistry and plant physiology tell us that autumn tints are due to chemical changes associated with the storing away of food material and the discharge of certain waste products. This explanation, though matter of fact and disturbing to our youthful belief in fairies and wood nymphs, opens up a field of inquiry which must tend to enlarge our point of view and increase our appreciation of nature's wondrous methods.

+ + While, however, the process of food evacuation is going on, other changes take place. In many plants a chemical substance, known technically as anthocyanin, is produced in the leaves, and often to such an extent as to become plainly visible on the exterior. It appears red in the presence of free acids in the cell sap, blue when no acids are present, and violet when the quantity of acids is small. In a great many leaves the bodies which contain the green coloring matter become changed to vellow granules while the evacuation of food substances is in process. Sometimes these granules are very few and anthocyanin is absent; then the leaf exhibits little outward change except losing its freshness before it falls. In others the yellow granules are abundantly developed, and if anthocyanin is absent, or nearly so, the whole leaf assumes a clear yellow hue. If there is an abundance of yellow granules, together with free acids and anthocyanin, the leaf assume an orange color. Thus the leaf at the period of autumnal change by the presence of these substances in a greater or lesser degree loses its green hue, and becomes brown or yellow, crimson or orange, purple or red.

The most casual observer knows that all trees do not assume tinted foliage in autumn. Some, like the alder, the locust, the elder, the silver maple, and most of the willows, exhibit little or no change save, perhaps, a number of yellow leaves scattered through the green before they fall. But this group is relatively small and only adds additional contrast. Yellow to golden are the tints of the autumn leaves of the white elm. beech, honey locust, chestnut, black birch, red ash, hickory, the spicebush, and the witch-hazel, while those of the black walnut, butternut, button tree, white birch, many poplars and the lindens, are a general mixture of rusty green and yellow, but in none of these is purple or red of any shade developed. The sumachs, the tupelo, scarlet oak, white oak, flowering dogstood, Virginia creeper, hazelnut, chokeberry, and many blueberries have purple, crimson and scarlet, with only a slight admixture of yellow autumn foliage. A final group to which belongs the sassafras, the red and sugar maples, and the shadbush, has variegated tints, comprising all shades of purple, crimson, scarlet, orange and yellow on the same or different individuals of the same species. Often the leaves are tinted and sometimes figured like the wings of a butterfly.

In favorable years the white ash is unique in its tints, passing through all shades from a dark chocolate to violet, clear brown and salmon, but it has no reds. The tupelo more invariably shows a mass of unmixed crimson than any other wayside tree. Its foliage first assumes shades of purple, which changes into crimson or scarlet before it falls. The oaks, the noblest group of trees in eastern North America, assume their autumn tints late, and are not at their zenith until after those of the maples have passed. In many of the oaks, and also the beech, the leaves, as they die, become russet-brown and remain on the trees through the winter, giving a sensation of warmth to the landscape in the coldest days. The tints of the red maple tree, so abundant in swamp and wood, roadside, and on dry hilltop, are autumn's crowning glory in Massachusetts. The sugar maple though more brilliant, has a narrower range of color and is more uniform in its tints, which range from yellow and orange to scarlet.

The glory of autumn landscape is a theme more fitting to the poet than the writer of prose, for it is easier to sing its song than bluntly to describe its beauty.
